~~May 1st, 2020~~—A pinhole camera is a camera without a conventional glass lens. An extremely small hole in a thin material can create an image when all light rays from a scene go through a single point. In order to produce a reasonably clear image, the aperture has to be about 1/100th the distance to the screen or less. The shutter of a pinhole camera usually consists of a hand-operated flap of some light-sensitive material.
